

When Intraday Trades Turn Overnight...

And the Importance of Breaking Rules

CONCRETUM RESEARCH

MAR 26, 2026

"If you obey all the rules, you miss all the fun" (Katharine Hepburn)

The first rule of intraday trading is simple: every position must be closed before the end of the trading session, with no risk carried overnight.

It sounds so obvious that very few traders stop to ask whether such an unquestioned rule can actually hide exploitable information behind it.

| In other words, what if an intraday trend signal does not fully exhaust its efficacy by the closing bell?

At first glance, deciding to carry a trend trade overnight can look like a minor implementation tweak. In reality, it changes the character of the strategy... so much so that this single design choice appears to introduce exposure to an entirely different risk premium, one that has been extensively documented in the academic literature

Full Article

For quantitative traders, we believe this piece can serve as a useful reminder: no matter how established certain rules are, sometimes the most valuable insights come from deliberately breaking them.

If you found this article useful, feel free to leave a comment and reach out via direct message or email at info@concretumgroup.com for any questions.

Message Concretum Research

Don't miss out on the next research piece.
Subscribe for free.

✓ Subscribed

